Is it not an instinct, and a strange one too, in children, to play funerals? Who of us in young days has not had the sweetly solemn pleasure of following in mournful solemn pleasure of following in mournful procession, the remains of some pet to its garden grave! It is recently a favorite tabby cat in one of our families, having fulfilled its earthly mission, shuffled off his mortal coil. And how was the affection he had inspired in his life time to be satisfied only as he should be buried with honors? A pleasant place in a garden, 'neath the spreading branches of an apple tree, was selected for the grave, and the grave was lovingly lined with evergreens. After Tabby's body was deposited in its last resting place, the sfilicted children took each a sprig of cedar, and, marching around the grave dronged it more it saying. "Alas each a sprig of cedar, and, marching around the grave dropped it upon it saying, "Alas, my brother!" And how the robins are constantly singing in the apple boughs above this grave. But just why birds sing over a Tabby's grave, they might not like to have one inquirestoo particularly. They might retort with the query whether the feelings of mortals, under such circumstances, could everywhere and always bear the closest inspection? But, other questions aside, will not fraternal societies hear in this fonereal event, prospective knockings.

Previously to her marriage to Mr. Austin, in June of last year, she had been in very ponr bealth, and in the time that she had lived here since she had not seemed a strong person. A few weeks ago her only daughter by a former marriage, was taken ill with scarlet fever, and fellowing her recovery, Mrs. Austin fell sick, and such was the complication of her diseases, she could not rally, in spite of the medical skill of three physicians. Mr. and Mrs. Austin were just ready to take up housekeeping on Construction Company Hill, having hitherto boarded since their marriage. She will be buried from the Congregational church on Tuasday forencen at 10:30, and it is hoped Rev. P. P. Womer, who married Mr. and Mrs. Austin, will officiate at the funeral. She will be buried in Brookfield. The time she had lived here was short, but we hear her spoken of as a pleasant lady and such she she seemed.

In late weeks there have been cases of diphtheria, tonsilitis and scarlet fever, altogether an unu usl number perhaps for this village and immediate vicinity. As usual in such cases, there have been fears, excitement, criticism and fault finding to some extent. Thus far there has been but one death among these patients. It sometimes seems needless to persons to have their homes quarantined, but better errif at all, on the right side than on the wrong, for the sake of the public health. For any good country physician of high character there must be some pleasant features in his professional life. But there must be too, a reverse side of the picture, as will come out in a time like this, in what seems the unkind, unjust and unintelligent criticisms of physicians.

Memorial Sunday was an almost perfect May day. The Methodist church where our union Memorial services were held, had been tastefully prepared with flowers and flags for the occasion, and when Pastor F.

flags for the occasion, and when Pastor F.
E. Currier rose to address the audience, he felt himself inspired by the size of the congregation that filled the house. He began his address by a review of the great providential work in the long past in the preparing of this country for a people that had, too, been prepared for its occupancy, a people that was to play such a part in the world as our own has done, and are yet to do. The speaker is not one who feels our greatness as a nation is all in the past. He sees in today, the greatness and the glory of the yesterdays, and believes that in the tomorrows of our national life, even greater and better things are to be. Alluding to the late war with Spain, that he characterized a most just one, he recognizes the great obligations of the United States as a Christian power, to its newly acquired possesobligations of the United States as a Christian power, to its newly acquired possessions, the islands of the seas. He brought not only one exceedingly dark, but none too much so, phase in the national condition and that was the terrible curse of rum, and the rum power that has already begun its satanic work on our new ground. But while great battles are yet to be fought between the powers of good and evil, it was inspiring to see the sublime courage and faith of this young minister, that the good is yet to triumph. As we listened to the words of Rev. Mr. Currier, embodying the truest Christian patriotism, our thoughts truest Christian patriotism, our thoughts went back to the utterance of one of our great statesmen, years ago, as to the tre-mendous, the irresistible power of the com-bined Methodist churches of our land when once arrayed against any great evil, for some great good. If we mistake not, no pulpit that Rev. Mr. Currier shall occupy, will ever give forth any uncertain sound on vital religious and national questions.
